Boburnoma is an important and unique monument in world literature and source. It is the first prose memoir and historical scientific work in uzbek languages. It's names. "BOBURIYA", "VOQEATI BOBUR", "VOQEANOMA", "TUZUKI BOBURIY", "TABAQOTI BOBURIY", "TAVORIXI BOBURIY".

"Boburnoma" is divided into 3 parts according to the course of events described in it: Babur's reign in Mowarunnahr (1494-1504), Afghanistan (1504-1524) and India (1524-1530). In the first part, Babur's father - about Umarshaikh Mirza, governor of the Ferghana Ulus of the Timurids (1461-1494) and Babur's accession to the throne of Ferghana (June 1494), but he was deprived of his throne due to the struggle for the throne that escalated in the Timurid state (15 90s of the 19th century), the events of the futile battle for Samarkand against Shaybani Khan (1497-1501) and finally, when the crown completely separated from the throne and went to Afghanistan with about 250 soldiers through the Hissar mountains (1504) It is mentioned in detail in the second part that Babur conquered Kabul, then established an independent state there (1508), occupied Samarkand again (1511) with the military help of the Shah of Iran, but the Shaybani (Ubaydullah Sultan, Muhammad Timur Sultan and After defeating Jonibek Sultan (1512), he returned to Kabul, and then began to prepare for the conquest of India. The third part is Babur's defeat of Ibrahim Lodi, Sultan of Delhi (see Battles of Panipat), Shim.

His behaviors, dispositions, and ideas while reading "Boburnoma" He manifests his inner self to us through his imagination. He used to depend entirely on Allah for every action he made, leaving the outcome in His hands. The word "risk" appears 10 times in the piece. Babur's conduct and deeds during the Indian conquest scenes in "Boburnoma" in particular are a striking illustration of his genuine bravery. The following information regarding the significance of the Battle of Panipat in Babur's life is taken from "Babur Encyclopedia" "It was evident from the battle of Panipat that Babur was a great general. Specifically, his use of fewer troops to beat a numerically superior opposing army is a military achievement. Babur's army had twelve thousand soldiers, but the enemy's army numbered one hundred thousand, according to eastern historians, including Babur himself. However, some European and Indian historians also note that Babur's army numbered roughly 8000, while Ibrahim Lodi's had approximately 20,000,000. An crucial moment in Indian history is the Battle of Panipat. Babur became a new great leader who formed the empire and solidified his dominance in northern India as a result of this battle. Since its inception, "Boburnoma" has had value, yet it is insufficient. It is evident from this work that Babur worked in over twenty different subjects. That is, disciplines that go beyond just describing the course of events, such ethnography, geography, languages, and the study of animals. offers insightful information on Baburologists claim that "Boburnoma" has been revered as a trustworthy source by the Indians themselves. This suggests that all of the material in "Boburnoma" is provided precisely and accurately.

We read about Babur, love for Babur is loyalty, devotion, nobility and humanity. He puts her above everything: wealth, social status, and all earthly goods. The poet in his perfect gazelles creates the image of a beautiful beloved, endowing her with an unprecedentedly beautiful appearance, rich inner content, and spiritual perfection. At the same time, he skillfully uses original artistic means. He sang sincere feelings of love, affirming earthly human love, Babur sharply criticizes the hypocrisy of fanatical sheiks and ascetics he opposes gloomy dogmatists. Hellfire, compared to the fire of separation, seems to him a spark:

If I knew that separation would kill me with evil,
From sweet to death I would live without knowing sadness.
Hellish fear... But before the fire of parting Hellfire is nothing more than a simple spark.
